Huanhuan

Huanhuan is the big brother of the Beijing Olympic mascots, the Fuwa. He is a child of fire, symbolizing the Olympic Flame and the passion of sport - and passion is the blessing he hands out. Huanhuan stands for the Olympic spirit. He inspires everybody with the passion to run faster, jump higher and be stronger, and he is also open and inviting. Wherever the light of Huanhuan shines, the inviting warmth of Beijing 2008 - and the good wishes of the Chinese people - can be felt. The fiery designs of his head ornament are drawn from the famous Dunhuang murals - with just a touch of China's traditional lucky designs. Huanhuan is outgoing and enthusiastic. He excels at all the ball games and represents the red Olympic ring.
